BPMN Notations

Events
- Start Event: The start event indicates where a process begins.
- Intermediate event: The intermediate event indicates something that happens between the start and the end of the process.
- End Event: The end event indicates where a process ends.

Processes
- Activity/process: An activity is a generic type of work that a department (for example) performs. An activity may be automatic (a task to be performed) or a block (a sub-process).
- Sub-process: A sub-process is an activity that contains other activities (a process).
- Automatic activity/process: Activity or process performed in an automatic manner, without human intervention.

Passages
- Gateway: A gateway is used to separate or to converge various process flows.
- Exclusive Gateway: At a given point of the process an output flow between the existing paths is selected.
- Parallel Gateway: At a given point of the process all output flows are activated simultaneously.

Pools and Swimlanes
- Its purpose is to represent departments, roles and responsibilities.

Connectors
- Sequence flow: Indicates the order in which the activities are performed in a process.
- Message Flow: Indicates the flow of messages (information) between two entities (represented by the components) that are prepared to be sent or received.

Main Intermediary Events
- Timer: Event implies temporal occurrence.
- Message: Event implies occurrence of exchange of information.
- Signal: Event implies occurrence of a signal given by the process.
- Connection: Event used to connect the start/end of processes, ensuring chaining.
- Cancellation: Event used to show the cancellation of the process.
- Error: Event used to show the occurrence of an error in the process.
- Constraint: Symbolises possible constraints identified in the activity.
Annexes
Good BPMN practices

A gateway is used to separate or converge various process flows, and is used when the flow needs to be controlled

Types of gateway used to converge flows

- Exclusive Junction
  Only one of the input tasks gives rise to the output task. Both signages have the same meaning.

- Exclusive Junction
  The flow continues when the first input arrives, the first task to be completed gives rise to the output task.

- Parallel Junction
  Flow continues only after all the inputs have been executed. All input tasks are necessary to generate the output task.

Types of gateway used to separate flows

- Decision
  Only one of the paths is taken. Both signages have the same meaning.

- Inclusive Decision
  The input task may give rise to one or more output tasks.

- Parallel Separation
  The input task gives rise to one or more output tasks. All output tasks are executed.

Good Practices

- There must only be one flow entering and leaving and activity.
- All the paths existing in the flow need to have an End Event.
- The same gateway must not be used for convergence and for separation.
- Intermediate events, associated with the activity, have their own placement method.
